A spirit of honorable 6th alt., Admiral Semmes contended elsewhere:— Southern gentlemen-looking to an adjustment of our political difficulties upon the basis of "universal suffrage" and "general amnesty" to the people of the South. How much of truth there may be in these political rumors is difficult to divine. Should the report be true, we have no idea that such a settlement would be accepted by the Southern States; nor do we believe, if dressed to "The Home Journal," Winehester, it communications for publication must be written on one side of the page, and with all other is, the character of Puritanism, that it cal agitation and sectional strife. Such is the character of Puritanism, that it is ever restive and impatient-ever desiring to meddle with the affairs of other people. This fact, alone, aside from forced by legislation, would deter the Southern people from accepting, or even entertaining, such a proposition. The Constitution, as it now stands, gives to each State the right of regu lating its own suffrage laws, and is a sacred and indicable right no State of the Union should surrender, and it cannot be wrested from the people except by revolutionary action upon the part of Congress.
